

Medical.
DR. J. H. SCHENCK OF PHILADELPHIA.

SCHENCK'S PULMONIC SYRUP.

POSITIVE CURE FOR CONSUMPTION.

SCHENCK'S SEAWEED TONIC AND MANDRAKE PILLS.

THE AUXILIARY REMEDIES.

The proprietor of these medicines conscientiously offers them to the public as the only safe, reliable and certain remedies for Pulmonary Consumption. He recommends them with equal confidence as almost a specific for every morbid condition of the body, which, if neglected, will end in a dangerous or fatal disease of the lungs. Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia are generally regarded as forerunners of consumption, and when these diseases manifest themselves, they require the most prompt attention.

The value of the Pulmonic Syrup has been tested in innumerable cases. My personal experience gives me the best assurance of the efficacy of this medicine. Many years ago I was given up by physicians as one who was in the last stage of consumption, and I was taken from my home in Philadelphia to my friends in Morristown, N. J., to die. I was wasted away to a mere skeleton. I was confined to my bed, and my physician (who had attended my father's family before my death) declared that I could not live a week. Then, like a drowning man catching at straws, I heard of and obtained this preparation of roots and herbs, which, to the astonishment of every spectator, soon made a perfect cure. It seemed to me that I could feel it penetrating my whole system. It soon opened the matter in my lungs, and I would spit up more than a pint of offensive yellow matter every morning for more than a week. As soon as this expectation began to subside, my cough, fever, pain and night sweats all began to leave me, and my appetite became so great that it was with difficulty that I could refrain from eating too much. I soon recovered my strength, and have been increasing in flesh ever since. It astonished all who knew me, and all believed I was too far gone to make my recovery possible. Many people who know me now are now living and enjoying peace of mind and trust in New Jersey and Philadelphia, who can easily satisfy the most incredulous relative to the truth of these statements. My disease was hereditary; my father, mother, brothers and sisters all died of consumption, and I alone am left.

Now I enjoy the best health, and have for years weighed more than 210 pounds. Immediately after my recovery I returned to Philadelphia, N. J., and for several years made the Pulmonic Syrup and gave it to the afflicted. It made such wonderful cures that the physicians of the place were astonished at its effects, and advised me to turn my attention to the science of medicine, and especially to the study of this disease. In fact, I was driven to it by the application of great numbers of people who came or sent to me from all parts of the country, calling on me to cure them, after all other human medicine was unavailable.

Since my recovery the Pulmonic Syrup has been extensively used for more than twenty-five years; and so well has it endured this long probation that its reputation and popularity have constantly increased.

Although it is an undeniable fact that some of the most serious cases of consumption may have been cured by this Syrup, yet I can assure you that the cure was not facilitated in many instances by the use of two other medicines, which are found to be most admirably adapted to the purpose. These are Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills. In order to understand how these medicines effect the cure which are ascribed to their agency, it is necessary to have some acquaintance with the pathology of the disease.

Pulmonary consumption (phthisis pulmonalis) is characterized by emaciation, debility, cough, hectic fever, and purulent expectoration. This disease has been the greatest scourge of the human race, and it has destroyed more lives than famine, sword and pestilence. An English writer, some years ago, computed that out of a population of eleven millions in the island of Great Britain, fifty-five thousand annually died of consumption. The same fatality attends the disease in this climate. One principal cause of the great mortality which attends pulmonary consumption is the false theory that it is curable. This mischievous error causes many consumptive patients to despair as soon as the nature of their affliction becomes manifest; and when they are hopeless of a cure they trip themselves to their graves by the use of invincible faith, and without making any effort to prolong their lives.

"Outcasts are traitors," says Shakespeare. Consumptive patients are victims by a false conclusion that their cases are beyond the reach of medicine.

Pulmonary consumption is, in most cases, complicated with disease of the liver and stomach. Before the attack of disease (says a French Physician), a change takes place in the condition of the blood, which becomes degraded in quality and endowed with a lower degree of vitality.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

that it is almost identical with that fluid. The gastric juice, as all physiologists know, is the natural solvent which, in a healthy condition of the body, causes the food to be digested, and when this juice is not secreted in sufficient quantities, indigestion, with all its distressing symptoms, follows. The Seaweed Tonic performs the duty of the gastric juice when the latter is deficient. It has, likewise, all the invigorating properties of iodine of potassium, iodine of iron and iodine-remedies which are often prescribed by physicians to strengthen the constitutions of consumptive patients. From what has been said, it may be judged that Schenck's Seaweed Tonic is a most important remedy in the treatment of pulmonary disease, and experience proves this to be true. One of the good effects of this Tonic is to enable the patient to digest such a diet as consumptive persons require. Physicians now admit that a highly nutritious diet is most proper for such persons. Indeed, the food cannot be too nourishing for consumptives if it can be made digestible. You may feed such a patient with articles rich and nutritive enough to produce rot in certain conditions of the system; but if the gastric powers of the patient are sufficient to assimilate those articles—in other words, if he is able to digest them—the lungs being thereby invigorated, will begin to exercise their functions in a normal and healthy manner, and, if a cure is possible, it must soon be effected.

The Seaweed Tonic, by improving the power of the stomach and strengthening the whole system, prepares the dyspeptic and emaciated patient for the use of the Pulmonic Syrup. The operation of the latter is to increase the vital energies, to ripen the ulcer, and to expel all the morbid matter from the system. But as Consumption is often coupled with dyspepsia or liver complaint, and as it frequently originates in these disorders, it is proper, in some cases, to begin with the use of the Tonic and Pills, or to use them simultaneously with the Syrup.

Schenck's Mandrake Pills relax the secretions and unlock the bile-bladder quite as well as a dose of blue mass, and perhaps better, and these Pills are warranted not to contain a particle of calomel. Some physicians have positively asserted that calomel or mercury never enters into the composition of these Pills, for, according to their theory, nothing but calomel could act on the liver, as these Pills certainly do. But to prove that the doctors are mistaken, it is merely necessary to notice the fact that Schenck's Mandrake Pills never produce salivation, whether they be used in large or small doses. Thousands are used weekly with the happiest effects. With calomel or blue pill the case is different. Large doses of this poison may sometimes act as a purgative, and so pass of without any visible mischief; but small doses will salivate, and this is the great difficulty which the "regular faculty" have to contend with. One box of these Pills, valued at 25 cents, will prove the efficacy of the medicine. No matter how active or how bilious the system may be, the habit of body is immediately corrected and regulated by these Pills. The organs are brought to a healthy and natural activity, and the Mandrake Pills are likewise an infallible remedy for sick-headache and piles. In many cases they have brought away worms from grown persons, who had long suffered with many unpleasant symptoms, without suspecting the real cause of their ailments.

I have rooms in New York, Boston and Baltimore, where I am professionally every week. At No. 32 BOND street, New York, every Tuesday, from 9 to 3; at No. 38 SUMMER street, Boston, every Wednesday, from 9 to 3; at No. 108 BALTIMORE street, Baltimore, every other Friday; and at my PRINCIPAL OFFICE, No. 15 NORTH SIXTH street, corner of Commerce, every Saturday. In all these places a full supply of medicines are constantly kept on hand, and no persons living at a distance need to be troubled with the trouble of sending for them. When arrangements will be made to see them as soon as possible. For instance, when in Boston see my patients, to me address me there, to go and see a patient which might occupy part of a day, it would interfere with my other engagements; but if previously addressed at my residence, in Philadelphia, I can make arrangements accordingly, when they will be at once notified what day I can visit them, when they can decide whether to send for me or not. A personal interview with me is not always necessary, for each of my medicines is accompanied by full directions in English, German, French and Spanish. However, I am always willing to give patients my personal attention, if they desire it.

Consumptive persons are earnestly exhorted to apply to me in time, before the disease has reached its desperate stages. When the lungs are destroyed, of course no medicine can create new ones; but I maintain that the first stages of consumption are curable, and even when the lungs are considerably diseased, I often succeed in restoring the patient to health. While one sound lung remains, I am certain of making a cure, and I will make proper use of myself, and strictly follow my directions.

I am the inventor of the instrument called "Schenck's Respirator," used in examination of the lungs. It transmits the sound or rattling of the lungs so loud and distinctly that, by experience, it is easy to determine how far the lungs are diseased, and what portion of them is involved. Thus the doctor can accurately determine whether the disease be Tuberculosis, Pneumonia, or Bronchial Consumption, or whether it is merely an affection of the bronchial tubes, sympathetic with the liver or stomach, and he can form a diagnosis accordingly.

The who desire to have a thorough investigation with the Respirator will be charged $3 for that service; but all advice will be given gratis, and I will use my best ability to explain each case which may be offered to my consideration.

COUGHS AND COLDS.
When there is any predisposition to consumption, the disease, in one or other of its forms, will often be developed by a "bad cold," or catarrh, the symptoms of which cannot be mistaken. When a person takes cold early, the stomach or liver is generally diseased. In this state of things the fever condition of the system cannot resist the changes of the weather and other external causes of disease, and so every exposure brings on a catarrh, with its common symptoms, a head cold, hoarseness, chills, slight pains in the breast, &c. These signs should not be neglected, and it is highly important that the sufferer should know what to do. When one cold is taken "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and a box of Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills, would make a complete cure, but, instead of resorting to a "regular physician," whose regular course consists of a "regular" system, let us, on all occasions, thus, for a cough or cold, morphia, black drop, pargolite, and still more of the same articles are often taken, in compliance with the doctor's advice. These medicines may mitigate the cough for a time, but the disease in the lungs goes on until the unmistakable symptoms of consumption begin to appear. It may be seen, therefore, that the preparations of opium, &c., which are usually prescribed in colds and incipient consumptions, merely conceal the disease by suppressing some of the symptoms; but on that very account they do harm by making the malady more insidious, and therefore more dangerous.

Let it be remembered that when the stomach and liver are in good order there is little liability to take cold, or, if one is taken, "on another," as the phrase goes, the bronchitis, or the lungs, become more or less diseased. A bottle of Schenck's